An iron condor is placed so you can make money if the stock doesn't move. A long straddle, on the other hand, needs a lot of movement in the underlying to be profitable. A short straddle requires only a little movement like the iron condor, but it remains unhedged and therefore it has unlimited risk.

Other options traders are interested in the net premium they retain after the sale of their options, rather than the price of individual options. A simple example is an iron condor, which involves buying a put and a call while selling a put and a call altogether on the same stock with the same expiration date.
